"Kozala"), where going out represented danger, but more often the pleasure of working and drinking because it was a place vineyards (the mention of Kozala dates back to the 15th century precisely as one of the locations of the city's vineyards), and towards which, in the zenith of the Monarchy, bourgeois mansions, courtyards decorated with exotic botanical species, new city streets bordered by historicist-secessionist buildings spread into the "center outside the center" during the time of the Kingdom of Italy, concentrated around the home for the gathering of fascists and in Rijeka, a church building that was stylistically unprecedented until then. The final "spice" was provided by socialism, which pushed concrete skyscrapers and buildings between houses and gardens, creating what Kozala is today - a highly urbanized integral city zone a few minutes from Korzo.
