rare opportunity! Rječina (Italian: Fiumara) is a river that flows into the Adriatic Sea in the city of Rijeka. It is about 19 km long, its bed is on average 9 - 16 m wide. It springs from a cave at an altitude of 325 m below the steep cliff of Kičeja hill (606 m above sea level). Until 1870, it was springing from under the neighboring peak of Podjavorje, but that source was buried due to an earthquake near Klana. Its largest tributaries are Sušica, Lužac, Zala, Zahumčica, Golubinka, Ričinica and Borovščica, but they are mostly torrents and are dry for most of the year. The river mostly flows through a steep canyon. In Rijeka, it splits into Mrtvi kanal (an old channel) and a new channel that was built in the 19th century. The source of Rječina has been used for water supply of Rijeka since 1915, and in 1968, near the village of Valići, a dam was built for the Rijeka Hydroelectric Power Plant and an artificial lake of the same name was created. The famous landmark is the restored Gašpar mill in Martinovo Selo, which is mentioned in the deed from 26 III. In 1619, by which Archbishop Ferdinando allows a certain Gaspar Chnesich to extend the seizure permit, which also mentions the mill on Rječina with the words "eine Mull am Flusse Pflaum". Among the fauna, the best known are brown trout and river crayfish. Rječina was the border with Croatia throughout the entire history of the Middle and Modern Ages, except for Jelačić's occupation of Rijeka (1848 – 1868) and the partisan annexation of Rijeka to Croatia after World War II. world war. Between the 2 wars, Rijeka was the border between the Kingdom of Italy and the Kingdom of Yugoslavia, i.e. the Italian Rijeka (Fiuma) and the Croatian Sušak.
